

Trustees debate religion

By John J. ...

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ALBANY met on Tuesday, April 13, to discuss the proposed creation of a new religious studies department. The board, which is the governing body of the university, is currently reviewing a proposal from the faculty to establish a new department of religious studies. The proposal, which was presented by the faculty at a meeting on April 12, calls for the creation of a new department that would be responsible for the teaching and research in the field of religion. The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20.

The proposal for a new religious studies department has been a topic of discussion for some time. The faculty has been advocating for the creation of such a department since the late 1980s. At that time, the faculty argued that the university's curriculum was lacking in the area of religion and that the creation of a new department would allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. The board has been hesitant to approve the proposal, however, citing concerns about the cost of creating a new department and the potential impact on other departments.

The board's decision on the proposal will have a significant impact on the university's academic programs. If the board approves the proposal, a new department of religious studies will be created, which will allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. This will also allow for the hiring of new faculty members who will be responsible for teaching and research in the field of religion. The board's decision is expected to be made by April 20.

By John J. ...

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ALBANY met on Tuesday, April 13, to discuss the proposed creation of a new religious studies department. The board, which is the governing body of the university, is currently reviewing a proposal from the faculty to establish a new department of religious studies. The proposal, which was presented by the faculty at a meeting on April 12, calls for the creation of a new department that would be responsible for the teaching and research in the field of religion. The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20.

The proposal for a new religious studies department has been a topic of discussion for some time. The faculty has been advocating for the creation of such a department since the late 1980s. At that time, the faculty argued that the university's curriculum was lacking in the area of religion and that the creation of a new department would allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. The board has been hesitant to approve the proposal, however, citing concerns about the cost of creating a new department and the potential impact on other departments.

The board's decision on the proposal will have a significant impact on the university's academic programs. If the board approves the proposal, a new department of religious studies will be created, which will allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. This will also allow for the hiring of new faculty members who will be responsible for teaching and research in the field of religion. The board's decision is expected to be made by April 20.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ALBANY met on Tuesday, April 13, to discuss the proposed creation of a new religious studies department. The board, which is the governing body of the university, is currently reviewing a proposal from the faculty to establish a new department of religious studies. The proposal, which was presented by the faculty at a meeting on April 12, calls for the creation of a new department that would be responsible for the teaching and research in the field of religion. The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20.

The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20. The proposal for a new religious studies department has been a topic of discussion for some time. The faculty has been advocating for the creation of such a department since the late 1980s. At that time, the faculty argued that the university's curriculum was lacking in the area of religion and that the creation of a new department would allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. The board has been hesitant to approve the proposal, however, citing concerns about the cost of creating a new department and the potential impact on other departments.

The board's decision on the proposal will have a significant impact on the university's academic programs. If the board approves the proposal, a new department of religious studies will be created, which will allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. This will also allow for the hiring of new faculty members who will be responsible for teaching and research in the field of religion. The board's decision is expected to be made by April 20.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ALBANY met on Tuesday, April 13, to discuss the proposed creation of a new religious studies department. The board, which is the governing body of the university, is currently reviewing a proposal from the faculty to establish a new department of religious studies. The proposal, which was presented by the faculty at a meeting on April 12, calls for the creation of a new department that would be responsible for the teaching and research in the field of religion. The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20.

The proposal for a new religious studies department has been a topic of discussion for some time. The faculty has been advocating for the creation of such a department since the late 1980s. At that time, the faculty argued that the university's curriculum was lacking in the area of religion and that the creation of a new department would allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. The board has been hesitant to approve the proposal, however, citing concerns about the cost of creating a new department and the potential impact on other departments.

The board's decision on the proposal will have a significant impact on the university's academic programs. If the board approves the proposal, a new department of religious studies will be created, which will allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. This will also allow for the hiring of new faculty members who will be responsible for teaching and research in the field of religion. The board's decision is expected to be made by April 20.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ALBANY met on Tuesday, April 13, to discuss the proposed creation of a new religious studies department. The board, which is the governing body of the university, is currently reviewing a proposal from the faculty to establish a new department of religious studies. The proposal, which was presented by the faculty at a meeting on April 12, calls for the creation of a new department that would be responsible for the teaching and research in the field of religion. The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20.

The proposal for a new religious studies department has been a topic of discussion for some time. The faculty has been advocating for the creation of such a department since the late 1980s. At that time, the faculty argued that the university's curriculum was lacking in the area of religion and that the creation of a new department would allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. The board has been hesitant to approve the proposal, however, citing concerns about the cost of creating a new department and the potential impact on other departments.

The board's decision on the proposal will have a significant impact on the university's academic programs. If the board approves the proposal, a new department of religious studies will be created, which will allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. This will also allow for the hiring of new faculty members who will be responsible for teaching and research in the field of religion. The board's decision is expected to be made by April 20.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ALBANY met on Tuesday, April 13, to discuss the proposed creation of a new religious studies department. The board, which is the governing body of the university, is currently reviewing a proposal from the faculty to establish a new department of religious studies. The proposal, which was presented by the faculty at a meeting on April 12, calls for the creation of a new department that would be responsible for the teaching and research in the field of religion. The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20.

The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20. The proposal for a new religious studies department has been a topic of discussion for some time. The faculty has been advocating for the creation of such a department since the late 1980s. At that time, the faculty argued that the university's curriculum was lacking in the area of religion and that the creation of a new department would allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. The board has been hesitant to approve the proposal, however, citing concerns about the cost of creating a new department and the potential impact on other departments.

The board's decision on the proposal will have a significant impact on the university's academic programs. If the board approves the proposal, a new department of religious studies will be created, which will allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. This will also allow for the hiring of new faculty members who will be responsible for teaching and research in the field of religion. The board's decision is expected to be made by April 20.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ALBANY met on Tuesday, April 13, to discuss the proposed creation of a new religious studies department. The board, which is the governing body of the university, is currently reviewing a proposal from the faculty to establish a new department of religious studies. The proposal, which was presented by the faculty at a meeting on April 12, calls for the creation of a new department that would be responsible for the teaching and research in the field of religion. The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20.

The proposal for a new religious studies department has been a topic of discussion for some time. The faculty has been advocating for the creation of such a department since the late 1980s. At that time, the faculty argued that the university's curriculum was lacking in the area of religion and that the creation of a new department would allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. The board has been hesitant to approve the proposal, however, citing concerns about the cost of creating a new department and the potential impact on other departments.

The board's decision on the proposal will have a significant impact on the university's academic programs. If the board approves the proposal, a new department of religious studies will be created, which will allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. This will also allow for the hiring of new faculty members who will be responsible for teaching and research in the field of religion. The board's decision is expected to be made by April 20.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ALBANY met on Tuesday, April 13, to discuss the proposed creation of a new religious studies department. The board, which is the governing body of the university, is currently reviewing a proposal from the faculty to establish a new department of religious studies. The proposal, which was presented by the faculty at a meeting on April 12, calls for the creation of a new department that would be responsible for the teaching and research in the field of religion. The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20.

The proposal for a new religious studies department has been a topic of discussion for some time. The faculty has been advocating for the creation of such a department since the late 1980s. At that time, the faculty argued that the university's curriculum was lacking in the area of religion and that the creation of a new department would allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. The board has been hesitant to approve the proposal, however, citing concerns about the cost of creating a new department and the potential impact on other departments.

The board's decision on the proposal will have a significant impact on the university's academic programs. If the board approves the proposal, a new department of religious studies will be created, which will allow for a more comprehensive study of the subject. This will also allow for the hiring of new faculty members who will be responsible for teaching and research in the field of religion. The board's decision is expected to be made by April 20.

THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ALBANY met on Tuesday, April 13, to discuss the proposed creation of a new religious studies department. The board, which is the governing body of the university, is currently reviewing a proposal from the faculty to establish a new department of religious studies. The proposal, which was presented by the faculty at a meeting on April 12, calls for the creation of a new department that would be responsible for the teaching and research in the field of religion. The board is expected to make a decision on the proposal at its next meeting on April 20.

INTERNATIONAL BALL

Students at the International Ball.

Alumni Concerns

Graduates express strong opinions about U.A.

Many alumni of the University of Albany expressed strong opinions about the university's current state and future prospects during a recent meeting. The meeting, which was held on April 10, was attended by a group of alumni who had returned to the university for a special event. The alumni discussed a variety of topics, including the university's academic programs, its financial situation, and its role in the community. The meeting provided an opportunity for alumni to share their thoughts and concerns with the university's leadership.

One of the main concerns expressed by the alumni was the university's financial situation. Many alumni felt that the university was facing significant financial challenges and that these challenges were likely to impact the quality of its academic programs. They expressed concern about the university's ability to maintain its current level of funding and about the potential for cuts in programs and services.

Another major concern was the university's academic programs. Many alumni felt that the university's curriculum was outdated and that it did not provide a comprehensive education. They expressed concern about the quality of the faculty and about the university's ability to attract and retain top talent. They also expressed concern about the university's research efforts and about its ability to stay current in its field.

The alumni also discussed the university's role in the community. Many alumni felt that the university was not doing enough to engage with the community and that it was not fulfilling its potential as a public institution. They expressed concern about the university's lack of involvement in local and regional issues and about its failure to address the needs of the community. They urged the university to take a more active role in the community and to work to address the challenges facing the region.

The meeting provided a valuable opportunity for alumni to share their thoughts and concerns with the university's leadership. The university's leadership is committed to listening to the voices of its alumni and to working to address their concerns. The meeting will help the university to better understand the challenges facing it and to develop strategies to address these challenges.

U.A. Students Express Strong Opinions

Students at the University of Albany expressed strong opinions about the university's current state and future prospects during a recent meeting. The meeting, which was held on April 10, was attended by a group of students who had returned to the university for a special event. The students discussed a variety of topics, including the university's academic programs, its financial situation, and its role in the community. The meeting provided an opportunity for students to share their thoughts and concerns with the university's leadership. Many students expressed concern about the university's financial situation and about the potential for cuts in programs and services. They also expressed concern about the university's academic programs and about the quality of the faculty. The students urged the university to take a more active role in the community and to work to address the challenges facing the region.

By John J. ...

U.A. Students Express Strong Opinions

After Finals - The Grinning Regret

After the stress and anxiety of finals, it's time to relax and enjoy the summer. The Grinning Regret is a new line of clothing that is perfect for the season. The line features a variety of styles, including t-shirts, tank tops, and shorts. The clothing is made from high-quality materials and is designed to be comfortable and stylish. The Grinning Regret is a great choice for anyone looking for a new line of clothing for the summer.

50% OFF

Available while supplies last. In-store only. Excludes all other items. Cash only. Expires 4/30/93.

Headquarters Shopping Center
100 West 10th Street
Albany, New York 12202
Phone: (518) 487-1111
Fax: (518) 487-1112

U.A. Students Express Strong Opinions

Head Office Shopping Center
100 West 10th Street
Albany, New York 12202
Phone: (518) 487-1111
Fax: (518) 487-1112